OCEAN VOYAGES

“The Caribbean’s tourism recovery went from 10 percent to 300 percent since the beginning of the year, which wasn’t a surprise,” says Daniella Gutierrez, an advisor at Ultimate Jet Vacations in Miami. “Despite the pandemic, people were excited to travel again after being stuck at home for almost a year — and what better destination than the Caribbean, [which offers] beautiful beaches and great food and so close to the east coast of the United States? We doubled our 2019 sales by the end of June and expect the same growth in 2022.”

With an array of new attractions, improved infrastructure, and new and refurbished hotels, the Caribbean appears well positioned for continued recovery.

Gutierrez’s colleague, Brandon Robbins, says that clients today know what they want. “Most travelers are looking for safe destinations with few to no COVID cases,” he says. “Most of the islands in the Caribbean are requiring all travelers to be vaccinated and/or requiring everyone to take a Covid test prior to entering the island, which gives peace of mind to everyone. Most of the travelers are also looking for secluded properties with not a huge amount of people and are spending more money investing in private excursions and transfers rather than sharing with anyone.”

For this reason, Robbins says that upscale properties like Beach Enclave in Turks and Caicos have been a popular choice. The company’s Beach Enclave Grace Bay recently announced a soft opening of nine new villas, each located on one acre of land, with an official grand opening planned for 2022.

Jimmy Carroll, co-founder of Pelorus, a luxury travel company that specializes in bespoke vacations, has also witnessed healthy growth. “The recovery has been steady and certain islands have been better than others,” he says. “What we are seeing is a big increase
