Today's fast-changing, hyper-globalized world has no shortage of incredible travel opportunities. This year, we've done all the legwork for you in rooting out the best, pinpointing the biggest hotel openings and cultural events of the year—along with the places you'll want to see now, before they change forever.

And because it's not enough to figure out where to go, we're also helping you decide when to plan each trip, according to hotel price data from Google and insights from our preferred destination specialists across the globe. The cheapest and most expensive times to go are rarely the best and worst.

So get your passport ready—there's lots of ground to cover in the next 12 months.

TURKS AND CAICOS

Best beaches in the world? Check. Amazing luxury hotels? Check. Non-stop flights from major U.S. cities? Turks and Caicos already had it all, but the arrival of its first new luxury properties since 2009 is injecting a family-friendly energy to a tried-and-true honeymoon spot.

Finally, for the multi-gen set, there's Beach Enclave, a collection of four- and five-bedroom homes on a seaside cliff just west of powdery Grace Bay Beach. It couples the privacy (and square footage) of a vacation rental with the amenities of a resort—such as snorkeling classes for the little ones and family outings on a Hinckley Picnic Boat.

When to go: May, for nice weather and great value.

When not to go: September and October, when the risk for tropical storms outweighs all else.

Whom to call: Jim Augerinos of Perfect Honeymoons.
